CommunityRx is a study about food security and related needs among parents and other caregivers of hospitalized children. Food security means the availability of food and a person's ability to access it. We are studying two different ways to give families information about food and other resources during and after a child is discharged from the hospital. We want to learn if one way is better than the other. The development of CommunityRx includes years of engagement and input from the Feed1st Advisory Board, including parents, patients, doctors and hospital leadership and staff.
